City of Port Orange Announces Resignation of Three City Employees

PORT ORANGE, FL –The City of Port Orange announced today that three of its employees have resigned.

Branford Adumuah, resigned from his post as Director of Public Works, to explore other opportunities. His last day with the City will take effect on Friday, August 18th. Lynn Stevens, Public Utilities Director, will also act as the Interim Director of Public Works, where she will be responsible for directing the activities of the public works staff until a new Director of Public Works is hired.

Mike Silvey has resigned from his position of Assistant Director of Public Works, which will take effect on Monday, August 28th. Mike has served at this capacity since September 2011.

The City has also announced the departure of Wayne Clark, Director of Community Development, who will be relocating back to North Carolina to further his career. His last day with the City will be at the end of September. The City Manager will announce a person to step up as the Interim Director of Community Development in the coming weeks.

"Mr. Adumuah and Mr. Silvey have brought us many advances in the Public Works Department and transformed the public works organization and we wish Branford and Mike success in their future endeavors," said City Manager, Jake Johansson. "Mr. Clark took the City of Port Orange to the next level with his vision in the way he was able to see the development and planning for our City. His move will bring him back to North Carolina to oversee urban development of New Hanover County. We wish him much success."

The City will be interviewing candidates to fill these positions until suitable replacements can be found.
